WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- The National Weather Service has extended a Flood Watch until late tonight for a portion of northwest California.
 - There is an increased potential for small stream flooding along with rock or mud slides in and below burn scars.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

- <https://alerts-v2.weather.gov/counties/CA>

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The National Weather Service has issued a Flood Watch for a portion of northwest California. Heavy rain is forecast to occur today with storm total rainfall possibly exceeding 5 inches across westward facing mountain slopes. The heavy rainfall may lead to urban and small stream flooding. In addition, mountain rock and mud slides will be possible, including areas around the Trinity County burn scar near Helena.

A Pacific storm system is moving through the region today. The heaviest rain will continue to be in the NW mountains, where another 2-4 inches will fall today. Other mountain areas will receive 0.50-2.00 inches. Lower elevations and areas east of the Cascade-Sierra crest will receive up to an inch of rain, with areas farther south and west receiving the least. Snow levels are near 6000 ft. in the north and 7000 ft. or higher in the Tahoe area. Even though the steady rain from this system will come to an end tonight, the unsettled pattern with occasional light rain showers will continue through the end of the week. The main areas expected to see the light rain showers tomorrow-Friday will be the mountains in the north and west. Valleys in the east and south may be partly cloudy and not receive any rainfall from tomorrow-Friday. Gusty southerly winds will be common in the northern mountains during afternoons and evenings. Peak gusts could reach 40 mph or more for a few hours tomorrow.

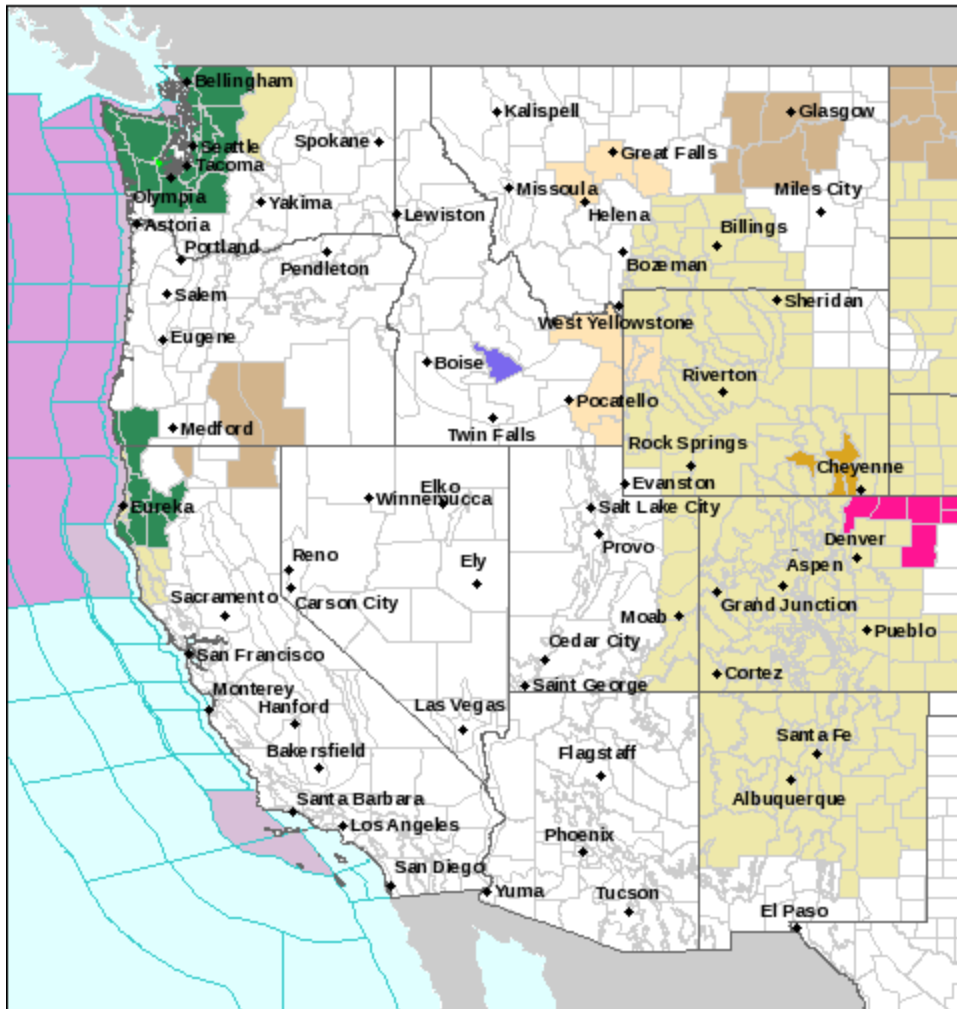

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Dry and partly cloudy conditions expected. Highs in the low to mid 70s along the coast as well as in the Santa Ana Mountains, and low to mid 80s in the interior. Lows will be in the mid to upper 50s.

There will be little change in the weather today as weak high pressure remains over the area. Maximum temperatures will be around 10 degrees above normal, with upper 50s and 60s across the mountains and 70s to low 80s in the valleys. The ridge of high pressure will become strong starting tomorrow, bringing significant warming away from the San Joaquin Valley through Wednesday. Record heat will be likely Wednesday and Thursday when many valley locations across the region will be in the low to mid 90s. The ridge will weaken bringing around 5 degrees of cooling each day Friday through this weekend. Minimum humidity will be mainly in the single digits and teens across the region and the Southern Sierra through the end of this week. Much of Central California will have minimum humidity above 20% through Tuesday and then drop into single digits and teens Wednesday through the end of this week. Humidity will increase a little this weekend. Winds will be light through this weekend.
